Introduction token :

A gold coin in the Achaemenid period had a weight of 35.8 to 42.8 grams. On one side, there is a picture of an Achaemenid archer running, holding a bow in his left hand and a spear in his right hand. The minting of this coin has been counted among the monetary reforms of Darius the Great, but some believe that it was minted before his time. What is certain is that minting gold coins was one of the king's special privileges. It is believed that the date of the first coin minting is 514 BC.

During the Achaemenid period, none of the satraps and local governors had the right to mint coins in their own name without the permission of Darius, they were only allowed to mint silver coins with the permission of Darius, because the minting of coins was the monopoly of the center.

The quality of Drake's coins was very high and it has been clarified by testing the obtained samples that the metal contained only 3% alloy. This high purity became the reason for the popularity of this coin and Achaemenid hard gold coins were always valid. At the end of the Achaemenid period, Doderic was also minted. The quality of gold coins remained constant throughout the Achaemenid period.
